

Angels in the Anglican Tradition:

Angels have been the source of great controversy for millennia. They are found in the holy texts of many of the world's major faith traditions, they have been noted by historians, described by theologians, painted by great artists, personified in marble and stone, and have become part of popular culture through books, music and films. However, such familiarity has bred confusion as to what angels are and their proper relationship to the created order. This multi-media workshop will examine angels from an Anglican perspective, firmly grounded in the scriptures and shaped by the experience of the early Church, as we seek to increase our understanding and appreciation of angels as a unique class of God's creation.
